This study material includes the following topics (CTET Exam Notes) by: CTET Exam Notes Topicwise Topic 5: Piaget, Kohlberg and Vygotsky: Constructs and Critical Perspectives The branch of psychology that studies the behavior and consciousness of children from birth to adolescence is called child psychology. Child psychology not only pays attention to the physical development of children, but also considers their psychological, social and emotional development. Child development and pedagogy is an important part of child psychology to understand the physiological and biological changes that occur in students. For teachers, the importance of child development and pedagogy is further increased as it is an essential subject of the Common Teacher Eligibility Test (CTET), which is an entrance exam conducted by the Central Council of Secondary Education (CBSE) to recruit teachers in government schools for grades 1 to 8. Both Paper 1 and Paper 2 of the CTET include questions from topics related to child development and pedagogy. Before talking about the teaching techniques of child development and pedagogy, important topics and tips for understanding child development and pedagogy for CTET, let's try to understand the following: Concept of Child Development Meaning of Pedagogy Child Development The term "development" literally means the physical and biological changes that take place within human beings since conception, end of puberty. It can also be defined as a process in which a person's internal characteristics interact with external factors or environment causing changes in the human body. The four areas of a child's development are as follows: Physical changes Emotional changes Cognitive or mental changes Social changes Pedagogy Pedagogy refers to the art and science of teaching, which includes accompaniment, guidance and bringing learning concepts to real life. Various teaching principles allow teachers to design assessment strategies and create memorable learning experiences for students. The most common strategy used by teachers to create learning experiences and design assessment strategies is based on the Analysis, Design, Development, Implementation and Evaluation model, also known as the ADDIE model. Teaching strategies for children's development and pedagogy are divided into two techniques: Autocratic Teaching Techniques, where the teacher has complete control over the course and students cannot act freely. Democratic teaching techniques, where children can freely express their opinions in front of teachers, and there is a lot of interaction between teachers and students. This is an important topic under CTET as a lot of Democratic teaching techniques are asked. Autocratic teaching techniques include the following strategies: storytelling method: in this method, teachers transmit content to students in the form of stories. This method increases the student vocabulary and improves their mental strength. Reading method: The reading method is the most ancient and one-way communication teaching method, which is very useful for the development of children's cognitive and emotional fields. Demonstration method: This method is more suitable for teaching practical topics, and students can understand these subjects with simple demonstrations. Democratic teaching techniques include the following strategies: discussion strategy: this method involves a verbal dialogue between students and teachers on a topic. The method of discussion cultivates the ability of thought and communication, which leads to the development of superior cognitive and emotional fields. Heuristic method: in this method, the teacher gives the student a task and driving. Students can solve problems after acquiring knowledge through self-studio and external research. Discovery method: through this method, students can find solutions to problems in their environment. Group method: In this method, students are invited to form a group, and then a project related to the real experience are assigned. Students collaborate with others to learn and solve real world problems. Brainstorming: This is a method of creative teaching that can generate a series of ideas to solve specific problems. Now, let's talk about the importance of the development of the child and pedagogy for the CTET, as well as preparation advice to prepare for arguments related to the development of the child and pedagogy.
