Zambian report latest news today.

It was raining when she gave birth. Between 10 to 15 women also die each week due to preventable complications from pregnancy or childbirth, the minister is quoted as saying by the state-owned Zambia Daily Mail. The majority of these stillbirths, maternal and new-born deaths could be avoided through the provision of safe and quality care by skilled health professionals, she said. She called for the adoption of "comprehensive health systems and community-based approaches". The minister made the comments at University Teaching Hospitals (UTH) in the capital, Lusaka, on Tuesday at an event to mark World Patient Safety Day. Ms Masebo was appointed health minister in September, a month after President Hakaïnde Hichilema won elections promising to tackle corruption and end Zambia's economic crisis. The health ministry has in the past been riddled with accusations of corruption that include the procurement of expired drugs and defective condoms. Since taking up the job, Ms Masebo has said she sees the decentralisation of health provision as a way of overcoming these problems and dealing with bureaucracy. During her visit to UTH, she was informed by staff about some of the difficulties they face in providing quality healthcare. She was told that the hospital's children wing currently owed more than three million Zambia kwacha ($170,000; £126,000) to local firms for drugs supplied in 2019 - a year when the institution only received three of its 12 monthly grants from government. His latest trip is a two-day visit to South Africa for talks with his counterpart Cyril Ramaphosa as well as attending a book launch. But the opposition Socialist Party has questioned the trip after his meeting with Mr Ramaphosa was described as a courtesy call. "So, what exactly is the purpose of President Hichilema's trip to South Africa if the meeting with President Ramaphosa is only a by-the-way? I quickly took the baby to the hospital and the mother followed behind," he said. The soldier risked a reprimand as he ended up being absent without leave from his camp. However, the grateful mother gave him the opportunity to name her newborn son - and he chose Raymond as the name for the little baby. At the promotion ceremony, eastern province commander Brigadier General Kelvin Kanguma said: "You're not a qualified medical doctor but you went out and helped that lady successfully." The army commander said the action changed the public's perception of soldiers. "You have shown that a soldier is someone who can help." Zambia's health ministry recently revealed that more than 100 newborns die every week because of delays in getting to hospitals and clinics, which are often far away. The Zambian government says the controversial open-pit copper mining project in the Lower Zambezi National Park will go ahead. Many conservationists and civil society organizations have opposed the Kangalawi Open Pit Mining Project by Australian-based company, Zambezi Resources Limited. In 2019, thousands of people signed a petition against it. But Zambia's green economy and environment minister, Collins Nzovu, has told privately owned Radio Phoenix that after exhausting legal processes and the courts dismissing an appeal to stop the proposed large scale open-pit mine, the project will now go ahead. He says the state has been left with no option but to monitor the situation and ensure the developer operates within strict conditions. Zambians have taken to Twitter to express their feelings, many in opposition. View more on twitter View more on twitter View more on twitter According to earth.org, the proposed site for the mine lies inside an International Conservation Union category II protected area in south-eastern Zambia, on the Zambezi River. The Lower Zambezi National Park provides refuge to globally threatened wildlife species such as elephants and wild dogs and is home to unique vegetation types including the only protected and intact lowland deciduous thickets in the southern African region. The organization warns that the potential long-term impact of this mine and the environmental threat it poses to the renewable resources of the Zambezi River ecosystem far outweigh any short-term economic benefits. River pollution caused by the mine could threaten the Zambezi river's 2,000-tonne subsistence fishery, which provides food and protein security to 20,000 people along the river's banks, adds earth.org. Mr Hichilema on Wednesday made his ninth foreign trip since taking office in August. Help Center Kennedy Gondwe BBC News, Lusaka A woman in Zambia has been charged with defaming President Hakaïnde Hichilema after she accused him of involvement in nefarious dark rituals. If found guilty, the 24 year old could face a maximum jail term of three years. Mr Hichilema is facing criticism for allowing such defamation cases to proceed as he promised before his election in August to abolish "archaic laws" should he become president. Last month, an opposition politician was interrogated under defamation laws for using the local riddle "put your buttocks down" to advise Mr Hichilema to take it easy. Humphrey Mangisani has been promoted from a lance corporal to a full corporal for his bravery. The story of the birth, which - according to Zambia Reports - took place last week in the eastern Petauke district, captured the nation. Cpl Mangisani said he was called to help the woman who had gone into labour. He organised for a motorbike taxi to take her to hospital and followed behind in another taxi. But her labour progressed so quickly that they had to abandon the bikes and he helped her deliver the baby in a field by the side of the road. "I quickly found a razor blade and helped her to cut the umbilical cord. The health ministry relies heavily on donor funding for its budget - and health professionals are poorly paid and conditions are considered so poor that it is hard to retain staff, especially in rural areas. This month, Ms Masebo said the government planned to recruit more than 11,000 health workers. It is not clear whether the salaries have been raised - and whether they will be enough to tempt the more than 700 qualified doctors who are not employed in the health sector because of poor pay to take up the offer. It will also require civil servants to show proof of vaccination in order to be admitted to work, although this will be done in consultation with the unions. The new measures were announced on Sunday during a joint update on the Covid situation in the country. Health Minister Sylvia Masebo announced a raft of new measures, including a requirement for all visitors coming from high-risk countries to be quarantined for 10 days at their own cost. She also announced heightened surveillance including at border points, markets and in public transport. She said the country was rolling out a nationwide vaccination campaign targeting at least two million people by Christmas day. It comes amid a looming fourth wave of coronavirus infections and after the recent discovery of a new Covid variant cases in neighbouring countries. President Hichilema said the country can only "realign sound democratic values with other countries", local media reports. Last month, the president denied holding talks on gay rights during his trip to the United Nations General Assembly in the US. Some media sources had earlier reported that a planned meeting between President Hichilema and President Joe Biden had been cancelled following anti-gay remarks made by Zambian Vice-President Mutale Nalumango. Is the meeting with President Ramaphosa a mere cover-up for his private pursuits? " Socialist Party president Fred M'membe wrote on his Facebook page. While in the opposition, Mr Hichilema often criticised foreign trips undertaken by his predecessor Edgar Lungu. Andyford Banda, a current opposition leader, tweeted that his party and current President Hichilema had previously both "condemned" Mr Lungu's administration for this, adding that "cutting costs must start with" Mr Hichilema himself now. View more on twitter However, Mr Hichilema explained his trip in a series of Facebook posts. He confirmed holding bilateral talks with Mr Ramaphosa which centred "around development, regional peace and security and enhancing our economic and bilateral ties". He also confirmed taking part in the launch of a book written by Greg Mills, entitled Expensive Poverty, Why Aid Fails And How It Can Work. Kennedy Gondwe BBC News, Lusaka Zambia's government, led by President Hakaïnde Hichilema who came to power in August, has been accused of attempting to muzzle the media by a consortium of 10 civil society groups. It comes after police warned and cautioned a journalist from Kenmark Broadcasting Network (KBN) after the privately owned television station aired a story about a presidential aide. In the report the aide is heard telling a top civil servant that a member of the opposition should be "fixed" in an audio clip that has since gone viral. The government has not commented on the story, but advised the media to be "ethical and professional". The civil society consortium suggested the government be more concerned about dealing with the revelations rather than criticising the press. The statement also noted their disappointment that a member of the opposition had been cautioned for using hate speech under the Cyber Security and Cyber Crimes Act, legislation the president criticised while in opposition and promised to repeal. There is increasing scrutiny on Mr Hichilema's government with many Zambians calling for more tangible results.
